Ledger Room

LOERIC is a probabilistic rule-based music performance system developed through practice-led research that models an expressive and interactive performance of Irish traditional dance music. Initially developed by Marco Amerotti, Steve Benford, Bob Strum and their teams at the University of Nottingham and the KTH Royal Institute of Technology, Stockholm, the project has been realised amongst traditional musicians at the Irish World Academy, University of Limerick over the past year.

In this closing performance of the conference, LOERIC will perform with a group of undergraduate musicians from the BA Irish Music in UL, pointing towards some ways AI can be utilised by traditional musicians to add new dimensions to their performance practice.

Closing Address

Prof Joshua Dickson

Head of Traditional Music, Royal Conservatoire of Scotland

Please contact the RCS Events Team on events@rcs.ac.uk if you have any questions.
